

The Orville Endicott Social Justice Award

This award is presented to an individual who has taken personal action to challenge injustice in our society in order to better the lives of people who have an intellectual disability.

Deadline for Nominations is Friday, June 30, 2017

The Orville Endicott Social Justice Award was created in 2014 to honour the long and admirable career of Orville Endicott. This award will be presented annually in Orville's name to individuals who have taken a personal action to challenge injustice in our society in order to better the lives of people who have an intellectual disability. An award that is a fitting tribute to Orville's work with Community Living – it will recognize those who have built on the legacy of advocacy and commitment to justice that Orville fostered.

Who is eligible?

This award is presented to an individual who has taken personal action to challenge injustice in our society in order to better the lives of people who have an intellectual disability.

How recipients are chosen?
